GLOBALIZATIONS

Globalizations seeks to publish the best work exploring new meanings of globalization, bringing fresh ideas to the concept, broadening its scope, and contributing to shaping the debates of the future.

The journal is dedicated to opening the widest possible space for discussion of alternatives to a narrow economic understanding of globalization. The move from the singular to the plural is deliberate and implies skepticism of the idea that there can ever be a single theory or interpretation of globalization. Rather, the journal will seek to encourage the exploration and discussion of multiple interpretations and multiple processes that may constitute many possible globalizations, many possible alternatives.

The journal will be open to all fields of knowledge, including the natural, environmental, medical, and public health sciences, as well as the social sciences and humanities. Globalizations will especially encourage multidisciplinary research and seek to publish contributions from all regions of the world.

Globalizations is actively supported by the Globalization Research Network, an inter-university consortium devoted to a broad range of globalization research corresponding to the themes of the journal. Visit www.globalgrn.org for further details. The journal is also associated with the British International Studies Association's IPE Group, Global Studies Association (North America) and Global Studies Association (UK).

Members of any of the above are entitled to a reduced subscription rate. Please contact one of our Customer Service Departments for further details.

Themes of the journal include:

Global Political Economy: stability and change; inequality, poverty and global justice

Global Environment: crises versus sustainability

Global Public Health: pandemics and remedies

Global Gender Relations: exploitation versus empowerment

Global Human Security: conflict, peace and collective responsibilities

Global Culture: singularity versus multiplicity

Global Governance: institutions, organisations, movements and global civil society

Global Ethics: values, dialogue and praxis

CONTRIBUTIONS

Globalizations does not confine itself to publishing only critiques of existing economic or neoliberal globalization, although such critique will always be a feature. The journal will engage with a broad set of social, cultural, political, and ideological debates on the nature and practices of global change. We hope to establish a bridge between the academic world and the world of practice and action.

Globalization publishes work that is relevant and accessible to a wide public, including non-governmental organizations and policy-making communities in addition to university teachers, researchers, and students.

Articles should be between 4000 and 8000 words. A disk and three hard copies of the article should be sent to:

Barry Gills, 40-42 Great North Road, University of Newcastle, Newcastle upon Tyne, NE1 7RU, UK

Articles and other correspondence can also be emailed to gjournal@ncl.ac.uk
